

We, the Resistance

By Chris Shaw

After nearly two years of relative complacency to the Covid-19 mandates and restrictions, a number of Canadians are finally awake to the harsh realities of governmental pandemic regulations. The quiet rage that so many apparently feel has been manifest during the trucker convoy to Ottawa, a protest which continues into a second week with broad swathes of the population actively supporting the trucker's actions in Ottawa and those of their allies elsewhere.

Meanwhile, our Prime Minister, Justin Trudeau, continues to hide, occasionally emerging from his hole or in Parliament to call the truckers and their supporters names and bemoan this "small fringe" group of "racists and misogynists." The irony of such statements seems lost on most the country's politicians, but it is worth noting that none of the truckers has yet seen fit to put on blackface or summarily dismiss females who don't fall into line, two of Trudeau's now famous failings.

As of this writing, the situation in Ottawa remains tense as city officials continue to demonize the truckers and their supporters, often in the most ludicrous fashion, while simultaneously trying to prevent food and fuel from being delivered. It is now becoming obvious that the Federal government is orchestrating these actions since it really does not know what to do about this protest, or the others springing up across the country.

If one had to describe the overall situation in one word, the word would be "pre-revolutionary." Indeed, that's where we are as any further escalation by the government will only trigger more resistance, and any violence from the government side may push the country further along the road to an actual social conflict.

The fact that the world is watching and in many cases those in other countries are copying the action of the truckers, may suggest that we are not simply in a pre-revolutionary stage here in Canada, but worldwide. Maybe the third world war will not be against zombies or aliens, but against all the governments that succumbed to the designs of the World Economic Forum's Great Reset?

One blatant demonstration that old ways of thinking are fracturing comes with some on the left now advocating staging counter protests against the truckers, the latter of course blue collar workers, formerly the bedrock of much of that same left. Such comments make it crystal clear that the left of today is not the left of yesteryear. Instead, the new left is one which cherry picks which workers deserve support and which do not, the difference apparently dependent on the official government/medical/media narrative of the day. "You are known by your allies," leftist Facebook warriors proclaim, decrying the rare alt right wing sentiments sometimes expressed by those who oppose mandates and coerced medical procedures. In reply, suffice it to note that the “allies” of those so pontificating have apparently chosen as allies billionaire Bill Gates and World Economic Forum director Klaus Schwab.

It is still early days, but for an increasing number of Canadians the following holds true:

Claiming that we are the “fringe minority”, the “racists and misogynists” is merely the sign of a government out of control trying every measure they can think of to bolster a failing narrative.

In reality, it is not just truckers who are resisting the mandates and other arbitrary measures by the Trudeau and provincial governments, it is scientists and doctors such as those in the Canada Covid Care Alliance, fired healthcare workers, police and civil servants, church groups of various denominations, and a growing number of otherwise ordinary Canadians who have begun to resist the encroachments on human rights.

Our resistance will only increase until we take down the whole rotten structure upon which the petty attempts at tyranny were constructed.

So if anyone wants to give us a name, it is this:

We are the resistance.